CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

This is to certify that the foregoing Notice of Deposition was served upon Plaintiff Bally and Defendant Williams by hand-delivery a copy, with Exhibit A attached, to their respective attorneys at the addresses set out in such Notice this 21st day of Dec, 1978.

EXHIBIT A

1. All documents which refer to or relate to the creation, construction, testing, demonstrations and communications concerning a pinball game now known as LUCKY DICE, --including without limitation notes, descriptions, drawings, circuit diagrams, drawing logs, correspondence, memos, purchase orders for parts, reference materials (e.g., Intel chip data sheets), flow charts, program listings, personnel time records, invoices for services or parts, and financial studies or analyses; and in particular (i) the conception, (ii) work toward reduction to practice of the first prototype, and (iii) reduction to practice and successful operation of the first prototype or physical embodiment.
2. All physical parts and components of the pinball game which came to be called LUCKY DICE, including any simulators or other physical units made for special use in the development of said game.
3. All notes, drafts, papers and other documents which relate to an IEEE Conference held at Asilomar, California on or about APRIL 30, 1975 1975 or to the attendance at or participation by any RAMTEK officer, employee or agent in said conference.
4. All notes, correspondence, travel records, memoranda, analyses and other records which constitute, relate to or refer to either (a) written or oral communications between RAMTEK officers, employees or representatives and any individuals or entities outside of the RAMTEK organization as to the RAMTEK plans for and work on designing, and the existence of, a pinball game which would or did include, inter alia, a microprocessor; or (b) demonstrations of a pinball game known as LUCKY DICE to individuals or entities outside of the RAMTEK organization --including by way of example and without limitation, disclosures, correspondence, oral discussions or physical demonstrations with or to representatives of Bally Manufacturing Corp. or any of its subsidiaries.
